CALL FOR MANUSCRIPTS

GSA Call for Papers - Special Issue of Innovation in Aging

Translational Research on the Future of U.S. Nursing Home Care

This special issue of Innovation in Aging will showcase empirical papers that provide an evidence base for the nursing home care of the future. The papers may indirectly address the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, but we are looking for innovative research that has implications for the ongoing role and structure of the nursing home sector in the United States. Papers with an international perspective will be considered insofar as they present evidence directly applicable to the U.S. sector. We anticipate that the collection of articles will inform policy makers and practitioners as they consider possible reforms at the industry, state, and federal levels. Manuscripts should be empirically based but may make projections for a possible future vision for the industry.

Abstract submission deadline: May 20, 2021

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Wayne State University School of Social Work is conducting a study on the impacts of climate change, changing natural environments, and water and housing concerns of older adults in Detroit.

We are trying to contact persons age 55 and above living in the city of Detroit; we would greatly appreciate your support of this project. Dr. Tam E. Perry, faculty member in the School of Social Work and team leader, works closely with local community groups and she would greatly appreciate your involvement. We would like to talk to any older adult living in the city of Detroit about your perceptions and experiences with these current issues.

There are four participation options:

1. Online Survey (please complete this link bit.ly/ACNED-Survey)
2. Survey over the telephone (contact our project director, Evan at 313-332-8267 to arrange)
3. Participation in an interview over the phone or zoom
4. Participation in a focus group over zoom

Please contact Evan Villeneuve at 313-332-8267 or ee8332@wayne.edu to arrange for a survey over the phone, a longer individual interview or participation in a focus group.

Black Women and the “Double Gap” in Wages in the American Labor Market

Dr. Michelle Holder

Wednesday, April 28, 2021, 2-3pm EST

The National Economic Association is delighted to continue our webinar series celebrating 100 Years of African American Economists with a talk featuring Professor Michelle Holder, John Jay College. There are over 10 million black women in the American labor force. One thing many of them share in common, besides their gender and race, is that their labor is undervalued. Recent estimates suggest the “gender wage gap” in the U.S. is currently about 20 cents—for every dollar men earn working full-time, women earn about 80 cents. However, where black women are concerned, the gap swells to about 39 cents, leaving them earning 61 cents for every dollar men earn. How does this happen? Partly because employers know which workers are more highly valued, as reflected in their compensation, but most black working women don’t know if, or when, they are being undervalued and underpaid.
